LAND DECISION.

In the recent decision of the U. S. Supreme Court in the case of Whitney vs. Frisbie, the Court announces a doctrine which, although it may be sound law, is against the interests of pioneer settlers and will have a tendency to delay settlement upon the public lands, until after the Government survey has been made. The Court say:

The land continues subject to the absolute disposing power of Congress until the settler has made the required proofs of settlement and improvement, and has paid the requisite purchase money. Before these steps are taken for the designation and assertion of his claim, Congress may at any time intervene, and either exempt the land from entry, location, or appropriation, or dispose of it by grant to other parties. Before proof and payment are made, the only right which the settler has is in an inchoate entry. When proof and payment are duly made, his right of entry becomes choate and he acquires (even before entry) a vested interest in the land.

Now under this decision a settler on unsurveyed lands acquires no rights whatever, except that by entering his land in the Recorder's office of the State or territory in which the lands are located he may acquire a mere possessory right from the State or Territory; but as far as the title from the United States is concerned, he may go on and settle a piece of land and cultivate and improve it, and after years of occupying, at the last moment previous to survey, the land may be given away or sold by the Government, and the settler has no redress. We have no reference in these remarks to the merits of the particular case of Whitney vs. Frisbie; and only refer to the effect of this decision with relation to lands which clearly belong to the United States, and as to the title of which there is no dispute.

This decision does away with the right of pre-emption. It has always been held that settlers on unsurveyed public lands acquired a preferred right of entry and purchase whenever the lands came into market, and that not even Congress could divest him of this right by an act passed subsequently to the date of settlement. So universal has been this rule, and so impressed has Congress ever been with the policy and justice of it, that in all of the bills granting lands to railroad companies, the rights of prior settlers upon the lands granted have been excepted. In this State, the Register of the Land Office at Marysville published notices informing all persons who had settled upon lands within the limits of the railroad grants, previously to the date of the grant, that by proving this fact within a specified time, they could enter their lands.

If Congress adopts this decision of the Supreme Court, as the basis of its policy with reference to the public lands, it will have a tendency to prevent the settlement of unsurveyed lands. Border settlers are squatted everywhere over the public domain. In many instances, they have made not only comfortable, but even costly and luxurious improvements upon the lands they occupy, under the impression that whenever the land came into market, they would have a preferred right to purchase it; but this decision of the Supreme Court tells them, that neither by settlement nor improvement, have they acquired any rights which Congress is under any obligation to respect.

It has been our custom to boast of our land system as the perfection of human wisdom, and as embodying the best possible code of laws for the disposition of our vast public domain. In truth, our land system is a humbug; the code of laws governing it have become a mass of contradictions; and the time of the Commissioner of the Land Office is constantly occupied in issuing to his subordinates explanatory interpretations and statements. The price per acre, $1 25, of public lands, is a fiction as far as preemptors are concerned. We doubt if there is a settler in the State who ever got a title to his quarter section at only the Government price; and we know many whose lands have cost them five or ten or more dollars per acre. If the settler lives two or three hundred miles from a Land Office, to secure his patent, he is at the expense of making several trips to the office, and is under the necessity of employing one or more pettifoggers, and then after paying a catalogue of fees, perhaps in the course of three or four years, he may obtain a patent. And a system which requires this routine of procedure is called wise and beneficial.

BUTTER MAKING.—The following sensible rules for making good butter have been stated and restated, but as they are short and pertinent to the season and fit to refresh the recollection, we give them place:

"1st. Perfect cleanliness from the milking of the cow to the packing of the butterr

"2nd. A dry and ventilated room in which to set the milk, at a temperature of from sixty to 63 degrees.

"3rd. Cream not to stand over 36 hours—24 is often better—in winter and summer, and 12 or 18 hours in most of dairy rooms.

"4th. Stir the cream and add a little salt at each time of skimming the milk.

"5th. Churn often; twice or three times is better than only once.

"6th. One ounce of salt to a pound or butter will more nearly suit the average taste than a larger or smaller quantity.

7th. To churn easily and get all the butter from the milk, see to it when churning that the cream does not much exceed nor fall below 63 degrees of temperature; this can be regulated by the addition of a little cold or warm water.
